

The Power of Five

What is the Power of Five? Well, it's really simple.

Do you have five friends or family who feel as you do and will Get Out the Vote?

Do each of them have five friends who will go and vote?

If so, then you have a voting block of 31 people (including yourself).

While professional organizers use a one for every ten model, if you keep it simple and work to ensure that five people take care of five other people, you have just created a successful voting bloc.

As a leader, it is important for you to make sure that your team stays in contact with the five people each individual is responsible for--particularly in the days leading up to Election Day.

Find out if rides are needed, or even create a carpool to the polls.
